

July 1 – September 30, 2013

Disney Cruise Line has opted to voluntarily disclose to the public all claims of alleged incidents onboard Disney Cruise Line vessels that fall under the categories outlined in the Cruise Vessel Security and Safety Act of 2010 (CVSSA), even if such allegations are unfounded (i.e., false or baseless). The CVSSA does not cover all cruises or all passengers and crew members, however for the sake of transparency we have included information relating to all of our cruises worldwide and all of our passengers and crew members. These allegations were reported to the appropriate law enforcement and government authorities. During this quarter, Disney Cruise Line carried approximately 200,000 passengers and a daily complement of approximately 5,000 crew members, and received the following allegations: one claim of theft of property valued over $10,000 was made by a passenger against a crew member; one claim of alleged sexual assault among family members was made by a passenger against another passenger; and, one claim of alleged rape was made by a passenger against another passenger. To the best of Disney Cruise Line's knowledge, no charges have been filed in any of these alleged incidents.
